COAL ASSESSMENTSIN WESTMORELAND COUNTY.

The decision of the Westmoreland Court reducing coal assessments in that county $70 per acre is more intelligent in its definitions than equitable in its deductions. It prefaches its findings of facts and law with the following interesting exposition of the lawful manner of making and revising assessments.

The law requires property to be assessed at its fair market value. The duty of the Assessor is to value every piece of land and property he shall after due examination and consideration before the same would sell for, if sold singly, and separately, not as a bona fide sale, after due public notice.

And the duty of the Commissioners is to return the results of the Assessors and inquire whether the same have been made in conformity with law and whether all property to be valued for taxation has been valued at a sum equal to its fair market value before full public notice at a public sale, suspending each separate tract of land, with the improvements only, to be sold singly and separately, not as a bona fide sale, after due public notice.

The greater town movement has halted too long. Let it now be pressed to early consummation, so that the forthcoming census of 1910 will give us the place on the map to which our importance as a community entitles us.

THE CENTRAL BANKOF ISSUE REMEDY.

Robert Bennett Weston in the Review of Reviews, advocates a solution of our financial troubles. His argument is not devoid of ability. He says

Insurance, currency, based solely on the interest of the individual, is out of the question. What we want is an issuance of properly protected bank credit notes to insure credit, rid ourselves of the present system of loaning interest rates. These and more a central bank will furnish.

Such an institution would deal exclusively with the money market and the public would not be exposed to the risk of loss.

The Washington Reporter declares that Washington county residents have to take a copy of the King Law with them when they go hunting in order to know what game is legal.

The Masonboro Journal is grateful that Christmas weeks finds no mindless disasters in the Klondyke.

The Scottsdale Observer sees a yet strong streak in the man who can face trouble.

Let's hope for a Happy New Year.

With two eminent southern Congressmen giving each other the lie and following it up with an interchange of flat, cold words, during which, according to the press, they did not even smile, it was the Fayette County editor, John T. and mouthed at each other over their respective railroads, he began to nod and shake his head. He then faded to a dull yellow, like wax, inclined to sit up and take a little nourishment. His best friend, the Conemaugh, was not so bad, but the Uniontown, though My Old Kentucky home is bigger than yours, says Sir O'Donnell to Brit'nsay, you're a bit of a luthorn in spite of all I've done for you. Sir O'Donnell is afraid to punch my face! says Sir O'Donnell to Brit'nsay, I'm afraid to punch away right in his further statement.

But the law not only requires property to be assessed at its fair market value, but it also requires that assessments be fair and equitable. No matter what plan of assessment is adopted some will have to bear an unequal burden. The function of the court is to see that a uniform and equitable burden is imposed and generally applied. An assessment on one property is not to be reduced simply because a few other properties are undervalued. If such were the case, no plan of assessment could be carried out.

Following out this rule, the Court finds that none of the lands have been assessed beyond their actual value or discriminated against, but it deducts $70 per acre as the value of the surface lands where such lands are not owned by the coal companies, or where they are assessed separately at the request of the owners. The evidence submitted as to the value of the coal and the valuations actually set upon it are as follows:

Fayette County Assessors Assessments

Connellsville $1,000 to $2,000 77.70

Tarboro 700 to 800 700

Brownsville 700 to 800 700

Wills 600 to 1,000 1,000

Dunbar 600 to 1,000 100

If the coal had been assessed in accordance with the language of the law, "at what it would sell for," it will be seen from the testimony that it would have been marked up a great deal higher than it actually was, yet it is assessed considerably higher than the coal of neighboring counties and from this point of view the Westmoreland and coal owners are being discriminated against.

But they are not the only class of property owners that have been discriminated against.

The Court declares that it is the duty of the County Commissioners to classify property of the same kind and to apply to it a uniform standard of assessments, but ought not this uniformity extend to the classifications themselves? We have seen that the coal assessments of Westmoreland county are only about one-half the actual value of the coal, yet we are told by the Westmoreland County School Directors' Association that some other properties are assessed at 50 per cent of their value. Is this not rank discrimination between the classes?

It is evident that assessments are uniform only in one respect, namely, that they are never made at full value as required by law. The Courts tell us that they have no power to increase valuations even after evidence, but only to decrease them when the properties appear to be "discriminated beyond their actual value, or discriminated against in their valuation."

If the law required the assessed valuation to be one half the actual value, is it not reasonable to suppose that the law would be more strictly followed with the result that assessments of all kinds would be more equitable?

THE NEW POSTOFFICE AND THE GREATER TOWN.

The evident determination of the Government to build its new postoffice building on the Davidson and Wallace lots means that the authorities recognize the fact that Connellsville and New Haven must soon, in the natural order of things be consolidated and the borough lines extended beyond present boundaries. The Postoffice Department has located the new post office with a view to its being the center of Greater Connellsville, and the authorities have we think decided on a certain judgment.

So far as we are able to judge the appraisal of the properties is a fair one, and we hope it will be satisfactory to the owners and that the site may be acquired without delay.

We would also suggest that it is time to begin the preliminary work of consolidation. The New Haven people are not unwilling to join with us, but they want certain street improvements guaranteed. This arrangement may also be amicably made between the Town Councils, or New Haven can issue its bonds and settle the matter at once.

Reformer Flynn goes to have a rocky road to travel. No wonder he has been such a strenuous advocate of Good Roads.

The Courier is glad to print church and society news but they say that they will not let it be printed and handed to the people. Telephone company has agreed to pay for the street lights and the town has no better idea than that of the Courier staff.

Exchange Etchings. The Latrobe Bulletin has discovered that the purpose of the State Department of Vital Statistics is the furnishing of statistics for ten years back to the Legislature. This year, the Data, more than ever, caused by an explosion of gas and steam machinery stand why the railroads are used as gas-guzzlers and open cars permitted in.

The Washington Reporter declares that Washington county residents have to take a copy of the King Law with them when they go hunting in order to know what game is legal.

The Everett Press thinks our own Bob Watson is right when he says that no candidate can win in Connecticut by his experience and tact what the people want him to do no worse than the statute in law.

The Brownsville Clipper Monitor tells us that it is mighty hard to cast in some lands to get out the Christmas tree.

The Masonboro Journal is grateful that Christmas weeks finds no mindless disasters in the Klondyke.

NEW LAWS.

Come With Rhode Island Legislature

Just Assembled.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 1.—(Special)—The General Assembly of Rhode Island convened in annual session today after it opened with the usual ceremonies. The most important work of the session will have to do with the report of the special commission created by the last General Assembly to consider the revision of the laws of the State relative to banks, institutions of savings and trust companies.

The report of the Commission will recommend the passage of a complete and comprehensive banking law that will embody the best and most approved features of the banking laws of other States.

To Cheapen Coal in Germany.

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—(Special)—A special reduction in freight rates on imported coal was put into effect today by the Prussian railroads.

The reduction is to last for two years.

The purpose is to counteract the present high prices of local coal, which are the highest on record in many years.

Ban on Cigarettes in Arkansas.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 1.—(Special)—A stringent anti-cigarette law went into effect in Arkansas today. It prohibits the sale or giving away of cigarettes and cigarette papers and provides a penalty for any one having cigarettes or papers in their possession.

100 matinees daily at The Solson.

CHILD LABOR

Is Prohibited Now in Alabama Under

Twelve Years.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 1.—(Special)—The cotton mills of Alabama have arranged to put into effect today the new anti-child labor law passed by the last Legislature of this State. The new law prohibits the employment of children under 12 years of age, and limits the work of children between 12 and 14 years to 60 hours per week.

The enforcement of the law will cut down the operating hours of some of the departments in some of the mills six hours per week. The mill and factory owners, as a rule, are well satisfied with the new law and believe it will work for the general welfare of all concerned.

THE GYPSY GIRL.

Will Be Rosabelle Leslie Company Play at the New Solson Theatre This Evening.

"The Gypsy Girl" will be produced by the Rosabelle Leslie Stock Company at the Solson Theatre tonight. Miss Leslie and her company of players are giving good performances and are greeted by enthusiastic audiences. The plays are well staged with appropriate scenery and costumes. A grand amateur contest is to be given Friday night, in which the local talent will participate. Three cash prizes will be given. Matinees are being given daily and are well patronized. This is the first time this has successfully been accomplished in a Connellsville theatre and speaks well for the merit of the company. The engagement closes Saturday night.

The Girl From Broadway.

"The Girl From Broadway," O'Brien & Mack's most recent musical offering, will be the chief novelty at the New Solson Wednesday, January 8. The comedy is described as a musical comedy in its truest sense and is a triumph of prettiness, gracefule dancing, exquiste settings and costumes, new effects and electrical devices and interpreted by a cast of well known favorites and prize beauty chorus.

The Man on the Box.

It is an old but true saying that "All the world loves a lover." A dramatic offering with a strong romantic love story where scenes are depicted that are true to life is also a source of splendid entertainment for those who visit theatres to this purpose. "The Man on the Box," the comedy drama in which Walter N. Lawrence is presenting James Lee Flanary, the distinguished comedian, will be played on view at the New Solson Theatre, Monday, January 6.

What is a woman profited if she shall gain wealth and social leadership, even the ornate that decks the queen of the smart sets, and lose the desire of her heart? To the decision of this momentous question came the heroine of our present tale—of love and fashion and "high finance." How the young woman, graced beyond the ordinary with health and beauty, permitted her inborn desire for wealth and power to swerve her from the path plainly marked out for her by love and natural fitness, is told vividly, graphically and powerfully. Of minor characters, in whom may be discerned the many types that go to make up brilliant, fashionable, so did Society, there is no lack. Not minor, however, but drawn in bold, clear lines, is the man offered to the girl of his choice all he himself had—a fighting chance of life and happiness.

CHAPTER ONE

THE speed of the train slackened. A broad tidal river flashed into sight below the trestle, spreading away on either hand through yellowing level meadows. And now, above the roiling undertone of the cars, from far ahead floated back the triple bell notes of the locomotive. There came a grating vibration of the keel. Slowly, more slowly, the cars rolled to a creaking standstill beside a sun scorched platform gay with the bright flutter of sunshades and summer gowns.

"Shotover! Shotover!" rang the far cry along the cars, and an absent-minded young man in the Pullman pocketed the uncut magazine he had been dreaming over and picking up gravures and valises, followed a line of fellow passengers to the open air, where out by the sea they were engulfed and lost to view amid the gay confusion on the platform.

The disengaged young man, however, did not seem to know exactly where he was bound for. He stood hesitating, leisurely inspecting the distant banks of vehicles—depot wagons, omnibuses and motor cars—already edging around a dusty gravel drive bordered by the conventional railroad water bed and fountain. The long train moved out through the September sunshine amid clouds of snowy steam.

"Lookin' for Mr. Ferrall?" repeated the bugagemaster, spinning a trunk dexterously into trunk with its fellows.

"Yes, one of Mr. Ferrall's men was here just now. There he is over there, underneath that tree bird dog."

The young man's eyes followed the direction indicated by the grub's thumb. A red faced groon in familiar livery was kneeling beside a dog's travelling cradle attempting to unlock it while behind the bars an excited white setter whined and thrust forth its nose silly paw, then the other.

The young man watched the scene for a moment.

"Are you one of Mr. Ferrall's men?" he then asked in his agreeable voice.

The groon looked up, then stood up. "Yes, sorry."

"Take those. I'm Mr. Steward—for Shotover House. I dare say you have room for me and the dog too."

The groon opened his mouth to speak, but Steward took the crated key from his fingers, knelt and tried the lock. It resisted. From the depths of the cradle a beseeching paw fell upon its cuff.

"Certainly, old fellow," he said nothing. "I know how you feel about it. I know you're in a hurry, and we'll have you out in a second, ready boy! Something's jammed, you see. Only one moment now! Those old dogs."

The dog attempted to bolt as the door opened, but the young man held him by the leather collar, and the groon snatched on a lunge.

"Do you mind if I try him?" suggested Steward.

"You mean that you are going to let him run?"

"I think so."

"And if he bolts?"

"I'll take my chances."

"Yes, but please consider my chances, Mr. Steward. The dog doesn't belong to me."

"But he ought to run!"

"But suppose he runs away? He's a horridly expensive creature. If you care to take the risk?"

"To take the risk," said Steward, smiling, as she drew relish. "Now, Flynn, give me the leash. Quiet, quiet, puppy! Everything is coming your way. That's the beauty of patience—great thing, patience." He took the leader. The dog sprang from the rumble. "Now, my friend, look at me. No don't twist and squirm and scrabble. Look me square in the eye—so. Now we know each other, and we respect each other, because you are going to be a good puppy and obey. Down charge!"

The dog, trembling with eager apprehension, dropped like a log, and laid flat between his paws. Steward unloosened him, looked down at him for a second, stooped and encircled the silky hand, then with a laugh, swung himself into the phaeton beside the driver, who, pretty hard turned, had been looking on intently.

"Your dog is yard broken," he said. "Look at him."

"I see. Do you think he will follow us?"

"I think so."

The horse started. Miss Landis looking back over her shoulder at the dog, who lay motionless, crouched that in the road.

Then Steward turned. "Come on, Sanguine!" he said gayly, and the dog sprang forward, circled about the moving phaeton, splitting the air with yelps of ecstasy, then tore ahead, mad with the delight of stretching cramped muscles amid the long rank grass and shrubbery of the roadside.

The girl watched him, doubtfully. When he disappeared far away on the road she turned the blue Inquiry of her eyes on Steward.

"He'll be back," said the young man, low, laughing, and presently the dog reappeared on a tearing gallop, white road toying, glorious in his new liberality, enchanted with the confidence this tall young man had reposed in him—this adorable young man, this wonderful friend who had suddenly appeared to release him from an undiluted and abominable situation—a cote.

"A good dog," said Steward, and the girl looked around at him, partly because his voice was pleasant, partly to stir within her, coupling partly toward him with mock solicitude. "Is it not horribly unnatural, in me to feel that way about babies and about people too? I simply cannot endure demonstrations. As for dogs and horses—well, I've admitted that I have, and being so shamelessly affectionate in disposition, why can't I be fond of babies? I've a hazy but dreadful notion that there's something wrong about me, Mr. Steward."

He scrutinized the pretty features unblushingly. "I can't see it," he said. "But I mean it—almost seriously. I don't want to be so absurd, but I don't like to touch other people. It is rather horrid of me, I suppose, to be like those silly, plump, luxurious Angora cats, who never are civil to you and who always jump out of your arms at the first opportunity."

She had been conscious of it when he first named himself, but absorbed in the overwhelming importance of her telegram, had forgotten to tell her telegraph, and left the analysis of the matter for the future.

She thought again of the telegram, theorized a little, came to no conclusion, except to let the mat or rest for the present, and mentally turned to the next and far less important problem—the question of this rather attractive young man at her side and why the name of Steward should be linked in her mind with anything disagreeable.

Tentatively following the elusive mental clews that might awaken something definite concerning her hazy impression of the man beside her, she spoke pleasantly, conventionally, touching idly any topic that might have a bearing, and under a self possession so detached as to give an impression of indifference, eyes, ears and intelligence admitted that he was a creature to look at, pleasant of voice and difficult to reconcile with anything unpleasant.

They discussed shooting and the opening of the season, dogs and the training of dogs and why some go gun-happy and why some are blinkeys. From sport and its justification they became inconsequential, and she was beginning to enjoy the fitness of their chance acquaintance, his open attitude toward things, his frankness, his gaiety.

Laughter thawed her, for notwithstanding the fearless confidence she had been taught for men of her own sex.

"It is, miss."

"Can't you take him on the rumble with you?" And to Steward. "There is room for your gun and suit case."

"And for me?" he asked, smiling.

"I think so. Be careful of that Sanguine pup, Flynn. Hold him between your knees. Are you ready, Mr. Steward?"

So he climbed in. The groon hoisted the dog to the rumble and sprang up behind. The horse danced and misbehaved, making a spectacle of himself and an execrable picture of his driver. Then this pretty little phaeton, swaying northward out of the gravel drive and went whirling along a road all misty with puffs of yellow dust which the afternoon sun turned to dazzling golden powder.

"Did you send my telegram, Flynn?" she asked without turning her head. "I did, miss."

"Can't you take him on the rumble with you?" And to Steward. "There is room for your gun and suit case."

"And for me?" he asked, smiling.

"I think so. Be careful of that Sanguine pup, Flynn. Hold him between your knees. Are you ready, Mr. Steward?"

Then this pretty little phaeton, swaying northward out of the gravel drive and went whirling along a road all misty with puffs of yellow dust which the afternoon sun turned to dazzling golden powder.

"Did you send my telegram, Flynn?" she asked without turning her head.

"I did, miss."

It being the most important telegram she had ever sent in all her life, Miss Landis became preoccupied, quite oblivious to extraneous details, including Steward, until the horse began acting badly again. Her slightly disheveled and perfect control of the reins interested the young man. He might have said something civil and conventional about that, but did not make the effort to invoke a reserve which appealed to him.

A staccato note from the dog, prolonged infinitely in hysterical crescendo, demanded comment from somebody.

"What is the matter with him, Flynn?" she asked.

Steward said, "You should let him kiss, Miss Landis."

She nodded, smiling, half attentive, absorbed in her own affairs, still theorizing concerning her telegram! She drove on for awhile and might have forgotten the dog entirely had he not once more lifted his voice in melancholy.

"You say he ought to run for a mile or two? Do you think he'll bolt, Mr. Steward?"

"Yes, fresh from the kennels, supposed to be house and wagon broken, stopped to shot and whine." She shrank her pretty shoulders. "You see how he's acting already."

"Do you mind if I try him?" suggested Steward.

"You mean that you are going to let him run?"

"I think so."

"And if he bolts?"

"I'll take my chances."

"Yes, but please consider my chances, Mr. Steward. The dog doesn't belong to me."

Tentatively following the elusive mental clews that might awaken something definite concerning her hazy impression of the man beside her, she spoke pleasantly, conventionally, touching idly any topic that might have a bearing, and under a self possession so detached as to give an impression of indifference, eyes, ears and intelligence admitted that he was a creature to look at, pleasant of voice and difficult to reconcile with anything unpleasant.

They discussed shooting and the opening of the season, dogs and the training of dogs and why some go gun-happy and why some are blinkeys. From sport and its justification they became inconsequential, and she was beginning to enjoy the fitness of their chance acquaintance, his open attitude toward things, his frankness, his gaiety.

This set her so much at ease, let her so confident, that they were on terms of gayest understanding presently, she gossiping about the guests at Shotover House, outlining the diversions planned for the two weeks before them.

"But we shall see little of one another. You'll be shooting most of the time," she said, with the very faintest hint of challenge—too delicate, too impersonal, to savor of coquetry. But the germ of it was there.

"Do you shoot?"

"Yes, Why?"

"I am reconciled to the shooting, then."

She laughed and started to flick her whip, but at her first motion the horse gave trouble.

"The bit doesn't fit," observed Steward.

"You are perfectly right," she returned, surprised. "I ought to have remembered. It is shameful to drive a horse improperly fitted." And after a moment: "You are considerate toward animals. It is good in a man."

"Oh, it's not me. When animals are uncomfortable it worries me. It's sort of selfishness, you see."

"What nonsense!" she said, and her smile was very friendly. "Why doesn't one man ever admit he's nice when told so?"

It seemed they had advanced that far, for she was beginning to find this young man not only safe, but propitious. She had not noticed recently half as much, and the outlook at Shotover House had been unclouding with only the overgrated Page twins to practice on, the other four collectively and individually horrid, her. And suddenly, welcome as moon from the sky, behind that highly agreeable boy, a tiny, trim, well Quarter-avotted! Her telegram had been addressed to Mr. Quarrier.

It was perhaps the reaction of her gaiety that recalled to her mind her telegram. The telegram had been a prompt answer after she had had time to consider a suggestion made to her by a Mr. Howard Quarrier. The last week at Shotover permitted reflection, and while her telegram was no complete answer to the succession he had made, it contained material of interest in the eight words, "I will consider your request when you arrive."

"I wonder, if you know Howard Quarrier," she said.

After a second's hesitation he replied: "Yes, a little. Everybody does."

"Do you know him?"

"Only at the club."

"The Lenox and the Patrons."

Preoccupied, dozing with carelessness, almost insentient, perfection, she thought idly of her twenty-three years, wondering how life could have passed so quickly, leaving her already stranded on the shoulders of an engagement to marry Howard Quarrier. Then her thoughts, errant, wandered half the world over before they returned to Steward, and when at length they did, and meaning to be civil, she spoke again of his acquaintance with Quarrier at the Patrons club, the club itself being solicitous to settle Steward's status in every community.

A BIG YEAR IN STEEL.

Earnings of the United States Corporation Close to $170,000,000.

PROSPECT FOR COMING YEAR.

Based Upon the Conditions of 1907 the Big Concern Ought to Make $200,000,000—The Outlook for Demand Now is Not So Good.

Special to The Courier.

NEW YORK. Jan. 1.—The United States Steel Corporation yesterday closed the most prosperous year in its history, not only from the standpoint of earnings, but production as well, had the prosperity of the Corporation enjoyed until recently continued uninterrupted, net earnings would have been close to $170,000,000, but the slowing for November and December will bring the net for the year down to about $162,000,000.

The year gave the Corporation an opportunity to demonstrate what it is capable of doing in the matter of earnings, the large increase being due largely to the vast amount of money put into new construction and in other ways spent for the purpose of increasing operating efficiency. Based upon prices which have prevailed in steel over the last 12 months, the earning capacity of the Corporation at the time of organization was not much in excess of $125,000,000 a year. This year's operations show an increase in earning power since organization of apparently $45,000,000. When the Gary and Duluth plants are in operation, the Steel Corporation will be in a position to earn $200,000,000 a year, based upon conditions similar to those which prevailed in 1907. When these facts are taken into consideration, an explanation for the strength of the Steel shares during the recent period of stock market demoralization is hardly necessary.

The argument has been advanced that the large increase in the earnings of the Steel Corporation over the last 12 months has been due largely to increases in the prices of steel. But such does not appear to be the case. A comparison of present finished steel prices with the quotations that prevailed a year ago shows only moderate increases. Increased production and higher operating efficiency have had more to do with the Steel Corporation's record showing than anything else.

The Corporation starts 1908 under conditions not the most favorable from the standpoint of demand, but an improvement is looked for long before the warm weather sets in. One steel man, who has heretofore been correct in forecasting steel earnings, says the net in 1908 will not fall far short of $100,000,000. If such is the case, then the Corporation will close the year with a surplus of approximately $35,000,000 after the payment of regular preferred and common dividends. The Corporation's surplus at the close of 1907 will run close to $10,000,000, of which amount more than $75,000,000 is cash. The earnings of the Steel Corporation through other sources than "steel sold" have been larger this year than ever before. Income from "other sources" includes interest on money loaned on collateral and in bank, transportation and railroad properties, cement silos, contract work, sales of iron ore, etc. The Steel Corporation will this year sell approximately 11,500,000 tons of semi-finished and finished products.

Within the last few months more than a half dozen small steel concerns have gone into the hands of receivers, including the Southern Steel Company, Shadoff Coal & Iron Company, Reliance Steel Foundry Company, National Wire Corporation and New York Steel Company. Practically all of the companies that have gone into receivers' hands are small and undeveloped concerns; in poor shape, financially and physically. It appears that receiverships for steel companies are about at an end. The large and important steel concerns are all strong from the standpoint of finance and have shown a marked improvement physically over the last several years.

DIVORCE IN NEW JERSEY.

New Law Goes Into Effect in the Most Quaint State.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 1.—(Special.) The new divorce law recommended by the Uniform Divorce Law Commission and passed by the recent session of the New Jersey Legislature, goes into effect today. The new law does not change the statutory grounds for divorce in New Jersey, but it does make one very radical condition. This is the provision to the effect that if a person sues for divorce in New Jersey on grounds furnished in another State, the decree will be refused if the offense is not recognized in the other State as sufficient for divorce.

For instance, a South Carolinian will not be able to obtain a divorce in New Jersey on any ground whatever, the offense taking place in South Carolina, because no divorce is permitted in that State.
